Follow-Up With Neighbors

That's fine, we're just working on figuring this out now. It was just a bomb dropped on everyone living here. It traumatized my roommates because nobody knew what was happening besides screaming & yelling. I am currently fighting the city, but I will have to figure out how to get my vehicle back.

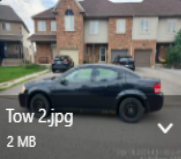

We're reasonable people, just speak with us next time, we would've been perfectly content to move it up or into our driveway. I just don't drive often right now because everything is accessible by bus.

I appreciate you reaching out, my temperament was more due to the ridiculous fines levied at me by the city. If I had been here a few minutes sooner, I wouldn't be paying the tow truck bill, because once they hook it, it's instantly 350.

We're very sorry about that, we originally called because the back of the car was a little bit in the driveway and it made it hard for the girls here to get in and out, and it also made parking on the street a bit more difficult since parking is limited. The officer was the one who suggested to get it towed since we mentioned that the car hasn't moved in over two weeks.

Hello Brandon

Please see attached – the officer has spoken to several parties on site and it was finally determined that the vehicle was to be removed. The officer has been more than accommodating and attempted to find the owner of the vehicle and based on your email, someone could or should have called you from the occupants of both homes. Ultimately the request was made to tow your vehicle as the officer always confirms whether the desire is for the car to be towed. You may not be getting the full and truthful story from your sources.

There was nothing out of the ordinary about this tow and it was conducted legitimately. At this time no additional consideration will be given to this matter.

Thank you
